Post-conflict related efforts by the international community towards state (re)building and reconstruction of society and economy have become a more or less regular feature of international affairs since the early 1990s. All have in common that the establishment of sound state structures and liveable economies in a given state are considered by a sizeable and powerful group of states as something that is furthering international peace and stability. The purpose of this book is to address the strategic and policy dimensions of these international state building and reconstruction efforts. The authors strike a balance and attempt to formulate recommendations.

International News: FIFA World Cup

South African Connection

All of South Africa seems to be dancing on the streets, in the stadiums and sounding the vuvuzela. Academia makes no major exception, it seems:

Prof. Ursula van Beek von der Stellenbosch University

SA is a nation of sports fanatics, so an event like this would be hugely fussed over anyway, as it indeed is. But there is more to it. As with all other things race comes in. Traditionally soccer has been played and enjoyed more by blacks, while rugby has been the "white man's" game. This is still the case, although the World Rugby Cup in 1995 seriously blurred the line thanks to the "Madiba Magic" (the magic of Nelson Mandela, who used the World Cup to build the nation). Since then much has happened and the lines hardened again, but some three weeks ago the semi-finalists in the Super 14 Rugby Cup (the Blue Bulls from Pretoria) took the game to the brand spanking new stadium in Soweto!! In their tens of thousands the white Blue Bulls supporters descended on the black township to be met there with an enthusiastic reception from the residents with whom they subsequently shared their beers and their braais (barbeques). It showed us all the power of sport and that people can and will get on together, if only the politicians will let them! The scenes from Soweto that Saturday three weeks ago and the following Saturday when the final was also played there warmed the hearts of us all. The long-forgotten spirit of oneness as a nation was reawakened; the same spirit that was so well portrayed in the Eastwood movie Invictus, and that we all remember so well.

Now flags are flying everywhere, people of all races talk about soccer, swap jokes about the vuvuzela, much like a bleating demented sheep, and they are all once more "proudly South African" in a sense in which race takes a far second-place. The excitement is reaching fever pitch; not much more is reported on TV beyond the World Cup and suddenly all the bad stories have disappeared from the front pages of newspapers. As said before: Down with the politicians! Power to the people!

Inevitably the euphoria will pass once more but the memories will remain and it's a treat and real joy to be part of it now and for the weeks to come!
